The British Geological Survey carries out the geological survey of Great Britain and Northern Ireland (the latter is an agency service for the government of Northern Ireland), and of the surrounding continental shelf, as well as its basic research projects. It also undertakes programmes of British technical aid in geology in developing countries as arranged by the Department for International Development and other agencies.

The British Geological Survey is a component body of UK Research and Innovation.

INTRODUCTION

Sources of Information

This edition of the Directory of Mines and Quarries, in addition to being published in hard copy format, is available as a download from the MineralsUK.com website of the British Geological Survey (BGS). The data on which the Directory is based are held digitally in the BGS mineral workings database BRITPITS, and a digital licence for its use can be obtained from the BGS; see https://www.bgs.ac.uk/mineralsuk/mines/dmq.html and https://www.bgs.ac.uk/products/minerals/BRITPITS.html

The production of this edition has been primarily assisted by the mineral operators to whom we give thanks for their assistance in the compilation of the data.

Information given

The current edition of the Directory follows in a line of mineral statistical records starting in 1858 (Figure 1) although the production and costings are no longer collected, the basic data remains the same. This is derived from a database (BRITPITS) which contains over 2000 entries pertaining to active mineral workings and a much larger number for inactive and former workings, totalling over 246 000 entries. Each entry in the Directory describes an individual onshore mineral working in terms of its name, geographic location, Mineral Planning Authority (MPA), operator, basic geology, mineral commodity produced and, where known, the end-use of that mineral. In addition, there is a list of mineral workings by MPA, and an alphabetically arranged list of company addresses. These include rail depots for handling bulk minerals and wharves for landing of marine-dredged sand & gravel and crushed rock aggregates; the source of these minerals is indicated where this is known. Although information from MPAs and industry sources on operational status was correct at the time of entering to the database, workings may subsequently have ceased operations, and additionally there may be new sites started in 2020, which are not reported.

The underlying digital BRITPITS database (an abbreviation of British Pits, and the word ‘pits’ is used here to include both surface quarries and underground mines) was assembled mainly from the records of BGS, MPAs, the minerals industry and various central government departments and agencies. These data are available in digital form under licence. Originally, only details of currently active and temporarily inactive sites were included in the database, but owing to the importance of former workings for waste disposal, amenity and nature conservation (Sites of Special Scientific Interest etc.), information is now collected on former operations. While the compilers have tried to ensure that the Directory is as accurate and up-to-date as possible, any derived list of active mines and quarries is a snapshot in time and is inevitably out-of-date as soon as it is produced. Changes in ownership, shifting of the extraction location as reserves become exhausted or a new extension commences production, and the renaming of sites are regular occurrences, and all of these cause problems when attempting to maintain a definitive database. It is perhaps inevitable in a work of this kind that there will be some omissions and inaccuracies. The Directory includes sites which are worked only on an intermittent basis and some of which may be currently inactive, but which still have valid planning consents. Estate quarries and other operations that do not offer material for sale have in most cases been excluded, although these operations must still have planning permission for mineral extraction. The compilers would be pleased to hear from any operators who feel they have been inaccurately represented so that the erroneous details can be corrected in the BRITPITS database and thus in future editions of the Directory.
The operations are classified by the type of economic mineral produced, as described in terms of the standard commodity names used for mineral raw materials in BGS publications and official statistics. The commodities produced in the UK in 2020 are listed in Table 4. A site’s Commodity may not match the underlying geology, Sand and Sand & gravel may be produced by crushing of Sandstone as well as being worked from superficial deposits. Dolomite is included with Limestone, except for the Northern Ireland entries, although known Dolomite producers are indicated where the mineral product is valued for its magnesia (MgO) content. Other commodity terms used in Northern Ireland include Basalt, Schist and Gritstone, which are included in Igneous and Metamorphic Rock and Sandstone for the rest of the UK. Shale and other clayey materials used for brick-, tile-, pipe- or cement-making, and for aggregate and constructional fill, are included with clay in Clay & Shale. Sand is described as ‘Silica Sand’ if it is used for industrial purposes, such as in glassmaking or for foundry use, as distinct from construction purposes, such as in concrete, mortar or asphalt. However, the distinction cannot always be defined with certainty as many operations classified under ‘Silica Sand’ may sell a proportion of their output for construction purposes and vice versa. Silica sands are increasingly being used for a variety of horticultural and recreational uses such as dressings for artificial football pitches and for golf course bunkers, where their purity is valued. Operations classified under the heading of Sand & Gravel include those producing both Sand and Gravel at the same site as well as a significant number producing Sand only. The compilers have attempted to separate those sites producing only sand from those which produce gravel and sand. Details of brine (salt) workings and land-based oil and gas wells are also included. For sites where more than one mineral commodity is known to be produced, entries have been made under each relevant commodity.

Commodity and end use

The operations are classified by the type of economic mineral produced, as described in terms of the standard commodity names used for mineral raw materials in BGS publications and official statistics. The commodities produced in the UK in 2020 are listed in Table 4. A site’s Commodity may not match the underlying geology, Sand and Sand & gravel may be produced by crushing of Sandstone as well as being worked from superficial deposits. Dolomite is included with Limestone, except for the Northern Ireland entries, although known Dolomite producers are indicated where the mineral product is valued for its magnesia (MgO) content. Other commodity terms used in Northern Ireland include Basalt, Schist and Gritstone, which are included in Igneous and Metamorphic Rock and Sandstone for the rest of the UK. Shale and other clayey materials used for brick-, tile-, pipe- or cement-making, and for aggregate and constructional fill, are included with clay in Clay & Shale. Sand is described as ‘Silica Sand’ if it is used for industrial purposes, such as in glassmaking or for foundry use, as distinct from construction purposes, such as in concrete, mortar or asphalt. However, the distinction cannot always be defined with certainty as many operations classified under ‘Silica Sand’ may sell a proportion of their output for construction purposes and vice versa. Silica sands are increasingly being used for a variety of horticultural and recreational uses such as dressings for artificial football pitches and for golf course bunkers, where their purity is valued. Operations classified under the heading of Sand & Gravel include those producing both Sand and Gravel at the same site as well as a significant number producing Sand only. The compilers have attempted to separate those sites producing only sand from those which produce gravel and sand. Details of brine (salt) workings and land-based oil and gas wells are also included. For sites where more than one mineral commodity is known to be produced, entries have been made under each relevant commodity.

A mineral working may be known under several names — one given by its operator, one by the MPA, a traditional local one, or even one relating to the land holding on which it is situated. In the Directory, we have generally used the name currently recognised by the operator. However, the reader is cautioned against assuming that quarry names are unique or immutable. Where known, alternative names which differ greatly are given in brackets after the current name. Extensions to sites, or satellite workings, are included as separate sites where these have been reported as separate sites by the MPA or operator. In some cases, the operator may consider a number of these workings to be one site, hence only one record of the address and other contact details will be given in the appropriate parts of the Directory.

To distinguish between underground and openpit workings, the word ‘Mine’ is incorporated into the name of every underground operation. Openpit and other operations are generally named by the term ‘Quarry’, ‘Clay Pit’ or ‘Sand Pit’ etc. The term ‘Opencast Coal Site’ or ‘OCCS’ has been superseded by ‘Surface Coal Mine’. Sites in restoration phases are not included, although developing mineral sites may be shown. Oil and Gas Fields are noted and Wells extracting from them are noted as subsidiary sites. The position of the Field may represent the centre of the licence area being worked and does not necessarily represent an extraction site.

The location of each site is described with respect to the MPA within which it occurs. For underground workings, the siting of the shaft or adit level determines the location, although the workings may extend into other administrative areas. Many quarries also straddle administrative boundaries, but the quarry is assigned to the administrative area in which it principally occurs and a note is made of the other Authority. A six-figure National Grid Reference defines the approximate centre of the workings or shaft/adit to the nearest 100 metres. The name of a nearby town or other important geographic location is also given, although this is not necessarily part of the postal address of the site. The postal address may also show a different ‘county’ to that shown as the MPA.

The name of the operator is given for each mineral working, although this is not intended to be a definitive company title and, in the case of the larger companies, a recognised abbreviation may be used. If the operator is readily recognised as a subsidiary company, then the name of the parent company may be given first, followed by the subsidiary. Satellite pits are grouped with the main operation where this is known. If there is more than one operator on a site, or one of the commodities is taken by another operator, this is noted by a separate entry.

Geological details are included for each working, based on the BGS Digital 1:50 000 Geological Map. The geological information refers to the stratigraphic unit (usually formation) in which the working is believed to be principally located, and does not necessarily define the material produced at any particular time. In this context, the reader’s attention is drawn to BS EN 932-1:1997 Tests for general properties of aggregates. Methods for sampling where consumers of aggregates are cautioned against associating physical or chemical properties with geological descriptions. Quarries may work more than one geological unit simultaneously, although only the main unit is generally listed unless another commodity is produced from the other body.

Sedimentary units are described primarily by their geological age and lithostratigraphy. Igneous rocks are described by name where known, or by a simple petrographic term, and the geological age is given where known. Other names are given where these are useful. Building stones may also be identified by a non-scientific commercial rock name, listed in the products, such as ‘Hard Yorkshire Sandstone’, where the quarry product is known by this term. In cases where new stratigraphical terms have been introduced, mention is made of the former name. The reader is referred to the BGS Lexicon of Named Rock Units, which can be accessed through the BGS website: www.bgs.ac.uk/lexicon/

Changes in the Stratigraphical nomenclature used in the Digital mapping have occurred since the 10th edition of the DMO, and the former name may be noted in brackets with the new designation.

Mineral Planning Authorities

An authority with responsibility for planning control, including deciding planning applications, for mineral working is called a Mineral Planning Authority (MPA). In Wales, Scotland and some parts of England, the responsibility for mineral planning resides with the unitary authorities, which deal with all planning issues within the areas for which they are responsible. In those parts of England with two tiers of local government (counties and districts), MPAs are the county councils and National Park Authorities. In Scotland, the Loch Lomond and Trossachs National Park is an MPA as it has authority over local plans and development control; structure plans remain with the four local authorities (Argyll and Bute, Perth and Kinross, Stirling and West Dunbartonshire) from which it was formed. Cairngorms National Park is not an MPA. The unitary authorities in England include the London Boroughs and the Metropolitan Borough Councils within former Cleveland, Greater Manchester, Merseyside, South Yorkshire, Tyne and Wear, West Midlands and West Yorkshire counties, as well as a number of others around major towns in other parts of the county.

Since the last edition of the Directory in 2014, there have been changes to the boundaries of the Lake District National Park and the Yorkshire Dales National Park enlarging the area of both and making them almost contiguous.

In Northern Ireland, local planning departments at the district council level are responsible for mineral planning. Applications for mineral extraction are handled by the district council offices responsible for the proposed extraction location. If the development is considered regionally significant then the central planning authority in the Department for Infrastructure assumes responsibility.

Arrangement

In Part I of the Directory, the mineral workings are grouped primarily by the mineral commodity produced, and subsequently by the Region in which they are located, in the following order: England – East Midlands, East of England, North East, North West, South East, South West, West Midlands, Yorkshire and the Humber; Channel Islands; Isle of Man; Northern Ireland; Scotland; Wales. They are then arranged alphabetically by MPA. Within each article, the first section is the name of the quarry or mine, the second section gives a grid reference and the location, the third section specifies the operating company, and the final lines include geological and any other relevant details, including products where known. Quarries worked as satellites are grouped with the parent site, where this is known. An example of the data layout is shown in Figure 10.

The National Grid

The National Grid used in this Directory is a widely used map reference system developed by the Ordnance Survey that enables any location to be uniquely defined. The country is divided into 100 km by 100 km major grid squares, each of which is defined by means of two letters, e.g. SK represents the 100 km square 400 000 m east of origin and 300 000 m north of origin. These are further subdivided by gridlines into 1 km squares and numbered from 0 to 99 from the south-west corner in an easterly and northerly direction (these are the grid squares on 1:25 000 or 1:50 000 topographical maps). Hence in any grid reference given in the Directory, the initial letters define the major 100 km square, the next two digits the 1 km increment eastwards from an origin in the south-west corner of the major square, while the third digit is the 100 m increment within the grid square. The second trio of digits give the corresponding coordinate northwards from the same origin. Further explanation of the system, together with worked examples, can be found on the Ordnance Survey website (https://getoutside.ordnancesurvey.co.uk/guides/beginners-guide-to-grid-references/) and on Ordnance Survey maps, of which the Landranger Series on the scale of 1:50 000 will be found to be a useful companion to this Directory.

Northern Ireland forms part of the Irish Grid and has a single letter prefix to denote 100 km major grid squares, e.g. J 236 741.

MineralsUK is the website of the British Geological Survey’s Centre for Sustainable Mineral Development. Facilitated by the BGS Decarbonisation and Resource Management science programme, the Centre is a global leader in the compilation, provision and analysis of mineral statistics, and the major UK national provider of spatial and statistical minerals information. We also carry out research in areas directly relevant to our user community, such as metallogenesis, land-use impacts of mineral extraction and geomaterials.
This website provides information about mineral exploration, mining, quarrying, production and trade. It also includes content on a wide range of issues, such as spatial information on resources, sustainable development, planning information and UK policy and legislation. The content of this website is being continually updated as the industry, legislation and information availability evolves. Our objective is to provide users with a portal into the wide-ranging minerals-related outputs of the BGS and serve as a central focus for minerals information specifically related to the UK. Please contact us with your comments and suggestions for improving the website and to assist us in keeping it up to date. The website address is: www.bgs.ac.uk/mineralsuk

Location of Mineral Workings

Several maps of major commodities worked in the UK and Northern Ireland are presented on the pages that follow, together with a table listing the numbers of active workings in the UK (Figures 3–9 and Table 4). Please note that more than one commodity may be produced at a single site.

The data presented here are held in the BGS BRITPITS database of UK mineral workings, together with details of over 240,000 other UK mineral workings. These can be accessed digitally from https://www.bgs.ac.uk/products/minerals/BRITPITS.html. The extent of the data coverage by 2020 is shown in Figure 2. Figure 5  Sand & Gravel resources and workings in the UK in 2020; see Figure 11.
The UK has one of the largest dredging industries in the world and marine-sourced aggregates make a vital contribution to the UK aggregate supply for construction, coastal protection and land reclamation. To date, more than 900 million tonnes of marine sands and gravels have been extracted from the UK’s continental shelf and marine dredged aggregates account for about a fifth of the UK’s sand and gravel production. Due to increasing pressure on onshore resources and the large quantities of material likely to be needed for infrastructure projects, this offshore demand is unlikely to decline.

Offshore sands and gravels have similar origins to their land-based equivalents and are mainly derived from glacial and fluvial depositional systems. Many marine aggregate resources are relict deposits that were formed during times when the sea level was much lower than present. During these periods large parts of the sea bed were exposed, glaciated or crossed by major river systems. Most relict sand and gravel deposits are related to a combination of major deltaic river systems, formed in periglacial conditions that prevailed before the last major ice age, and glacial sediments related to late Pleistocene major glacial events. These glacial events provided an abundance of coarse-grained sediment from glaciofluvial meltwaters and morainic deposits and scoured major channels into what is now the sea bed, some of which later filled with aggregate minerals. More modern marine sand deposits (gravel is generally only mobilised by the most extreme sea bed currents in the modern marine environment) are formed from tidal currents and wave action re-working and sorting sand into semi-mobile banks and sand waves.

Northern Ireland

For Northern Ireland, statistics and entries have been broken down by county to give an indication of geographical variations, although mineral planning is not undertaken on a County by County basis, but by the recently formed District Councils listed below.

The following list includes all mineral operations known to have been working in 2019. This inevitably includes some that have been mothballed, ceased operations or changed operator subsequent to the date of the surveys, which were carried out between July 2019 and December 2019. The mineral workings are arranged primarily in alphabetical order of the main commodity produced and subsequently in order of Regions and Mineral Planning Authorities.

Remote subsidiary sites and major extensions to workings, if known, are shown indented below their parent.

The names of lithologies worked or handled in the operation are given, where known, as is the rock type, the age and the name of the source bedrock unit. With superficial materials, the different source units may be distinguished by a numerical suffix, e.g. River Terrace Deposits, 3 (River Blackwater Gravel) and if known by an alternative or previous name, this is given in brackets.

The BGS Lexicon of Named Rock Units can be found here: www.bgs.ac.uk/lexicon/. This will give the most up to date descriptions of the body or bodies worked.

Wharfs, rail depots, oil and gas wells, plants producing desulphogypsum and other mineral products, are listed in this section with as much information as is known about the mineral production. If the source of the mineral handled at a depot is known, then this will be identified.

A number of sites are listed here which produce recycled aggregates. This is not a full list of such depots, but in the main they are either former quarry sites which are now producing secondary aggregate, or current quarry sites where recycling takes place alongside primary aggregate production.

Alphabetical list of operators

The following pages comprise an alphabetical list of mineral operators, their addresses, telephone and facsimile numbers together with their respective operations, when known. Subsidiary operators are listed under the Parent operator where known, indented. In general, the main office address of the operator, and appropriate sub-office, is given together with the address of each mineral working. However, where operators have only one operation only one address may be given. Where a mineral working has no permanent telephone or facilities for receiving mail, the appropriate part of the entry is, in general, omitted or curtailed.

Note: some site extensions and satellites may not be listed in this section.
